Skilled workers immigrating from third countries

Migrants make a significant contribution to Germany's social and economic development. The growing need for skilled workers is attracting well qualified people from abroad. The Federal Government (#) wants to facilitate increased migration, not least to counteract the shortage of skilled workers which is due to demographic change.

In addition to boosting the activation of Germany's own pool of potential skilled workers and encouraging greater immigration (#) from EU member states, the Federal Government sees the migration of skilled workers from third countries as a means of counteracting demographic change and helping ensure there are enough skilled workers. To this end, Germany reformed its Skilled Immigration (#) Act in 2023, introducing among other things the "Opportunity Card". This visa enables qualified professionals who fulfil certain conditions to come to Germany for a year to search for work.
